The Launch Bay story

Hobsonville Point is renowned for its military and aviation heritage. Established as an Air Force base in 1929, the Point and Catalina Bay became the primary location for New Zealand’s amphibious aircraft throughout the 1930s and 40s. It expanded over the years to incorporate barracks, houses and hangars big enough to fit the impressive Short Sunderland Flying Boat with its 34-metre wingspan. Hobsonville Point flourished until 1967, when the amphibious aircraft were finally decommissioned.

Today, the historic Oval, once home to military parades and garden parties, is preserved as a common recreation space; the historic Seaplane and Sunderland Hangars have been transformed into stylish eateries, retail and office space, and the original Officers’ Houses are beautifully restored as contemporary homes.

Launch Bay has a rich aviation and military history, from the impressive flying boats that once operated here to the large-scale aircraft hangars and the formal waterfront parade grounds.
